Understanding Sciences Lecture Series

Time: February 18, 2017 Saturday, 2:00PM

Topic: Healthy Aging: How to Promote Physical and Mental Function

Speaker: Ming T. Tsuang, M.D., Ph.D., D.Sc.

By the middle of this century, the population aged 65 and over in the US is projected almost to double from current estimates of 43 to 84 million.

With this demographic shift in mind, understanding successful aging is an increasing priority.

Preventing age-related physical disability and cognitive decline requires more than simply differentiating the healthy population from those characterized by illness or impairment – it is also important to understand influences that contribute to healthy trajectories in order to characterize pathways to optimal health.

In keeping with this view, the presentation will examine factors which promote healthy aging and encourage physical and mental function.

Evidence will be gleaned from peer reviewed scientific literature and presented in layman’s terms in an effort to elucidate current research in this area while edifying the audience in this area.

A question and answer session will follow.

Ming Tsuang MD, PhD, D.Sc, is Behavioral Genomics Endowed Chair and University Professor, University of California; Distinguished Professor of Psychiatry, and Director of the Center for Behavioral Genomics, Department of Psychiatry, University of California, San Diego, CA. He received his M.D. degree from National Taiwan University and a Ph.D. in Psychiatric Genetics in addition to a Doctor of Science in Genetic Epidemiology from the University of London, UK. He has been recognized worldwide for his research in schizophrenia, manic-depressive illness, substance abuse, Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), Spirituality, and Wellbeing.

He is a member of the Institute of Medicine, National Academy of Sciences, and a Council Member of the Taiwan National Health Research Institute (NHRI), and is an Academician, Academia Sinica of Taiwan.
